Antiwar protesters pass the Lincoln Memorial on Wednesday as they participate in the March of the Dead from Arlington Cemetery to downtown D.C. Wednesday marked the fifth anniversary of the Iraq war.

WASHINGTON | President Bush defiantly defended the Iraq war Wednesday as U.S. troops began a sixth year of combat in the long and costly conflict that has dominated his presidency. Bush conceded the war has been harder and more expensive than anticipated but insisted it has all been necessary to keep Americans safe.

Protesters marked the anniversary of the U.S. invasion with demonstrations near the White House and in other cities, though they seemed to lack the fervor of those that preceded the war.

Bush, in a speech at the Pentagon, offered some of his boldest assessments of progress and said the war's legacy is absolute: "The world is better, and the United States of America is safer."

A war-weary country isn't nearly so convinced. The majority of people think the invasion was a mistake, polls show. However, Americans are more split about how the war is going and when U.S. troops should be pulled home, as reduced violence in Iraq has begun to influence the public view.

Almost 4,000 U.S. military members have died, and more than 29,000 have been wounded. The cost is $500 billion and counting. "No one would argue that this war has not come at a high cost in lives and treasure," Bush said. "But those costs are necessary when we consider the cost of a strategic victory for our enemies in Iraq." (AP)

"The battle in Iraq is noble, it is necessary and it is just. And with your courage, the battle in Iraq will end in victory."

LOVE

They Were Swinging, They're Now Single

Two Athens, Tenn., teenagers, one dangling from a rope tied to a bridge and holding a can of spray paint, did not see Sheriff's Deputy Melissa Myers when she drove up. They never got a chance to express their love with graffiti. Matthew Musnicki "was going to write his name, 'loves' and then the girl's name" and Michael Clark was going to do the same on the other side, Myers said. The deputy arrested them both. She shot a short video with her cell phone because the incident sounded too strange to be true. (AP)

Mighty Superpower Turns Gaze to Toilets

Among all the concerns surrounding the Beijing Olympics, a more basic problem has arisen: the toilets. At test events held by organizers, the presence of squat toilets at many of the venues has drawn frequent complaints. "We have asked the venues ... to increase the number of sit-down toilets," said Yao Hui, deputy director of venue management. "Many people have raised the question of toilets." The toilets are used widely in Asia, but rarely in the West. Beijing is expecting about 500,000 foreigners for the games. (AP)

Two sisters from Virginia who are selling a corn flake shaped like Illinois on eBay say the site canceled their listing for violating its "food policy." The corn flake had drawn much attention and dozens of bids, some at nearly $1 million, which the McIntire sisters deemed fraudulent. The McIntires said they've relisted the flake on eBay, but this time they're auctioning a coupon redeemable for their corn flake, instead of the cereal itself. (AP)

High Court Overturns Conviction

Justices say blacks should not have been excluded from La. jury

WASHINGTON | The Supreme Court threw out a death sentence and murder conviction Wednesday because a Louisiana prosecutor kept blacks off the jury in a trial he called his "O.J. Simpson case."

By a 7-2 vote, the justices said state prosecutor Jim Williams improperly excluded blacks from the jury that convicted Allen Snyder of killing his estranged wife's companion. Snyder is black, and the jurors were white.

During jury selection in the trial, Williams disqualified all five blacks in the pool of prospective jurors. The trial took place in August 1996, less than a year after Simpson was acquitted of killing his ex-wife and a male friend of hers. Leading up to the trial, Williams made repeated public references to the Snyder case as his "O.J. Simpson case."

Justices Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia dissented. Thomas said he would not "second-guess" the judge. MARK SHERMAN (AP)

Clinton Presses Obama on Revotes

Senator says it would be 'un-American' to not seat Fla., Mich.

DETROIT | Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton bluntly challenged Sen. Barack Obama to agree to new primaries in Michigan and Florida on Wednesday and said it was "wrong, and, frankly, un-American" not to have the two delegations seated at the Democratic National Convention.

"Senator Obama speaks passionately on the campaign trail about empowering the American people," said the former first lady, who trails her rival in delegates won to date. "Today, I am asking him to match those words with actions."

Obama has yet to declare his support or opposition, although his campaign has raised a number of procedural and legal questions about the most recent proposal for an early June primary in Michigan.

"The proposal offers a rerun for the state but not for all the voters," Bob Bauer, Obama's election lawyer, wrote in a memo Wednesday. He warned of the possibility of numerous legal challenges and embarrassment to the party.

Clinton made a hurriedly arranged trip to Michigan to dramatize her support for new primaries, at a time when some state party officials have been drafting legislation to hold a primary in June.

Clinton said nothing less than the outcome of the general election may be at stake in the dispute over the two states. "The road to a Democratic White House goes through Michigan and Florida," she said.

But there were strong political calculations at work, as well.

Lopsided victories in second primaries in Florida and Michigan would help narrow her delegate deficit.

Even if she fell short, victories over Obama would strengthen her argument that party leaders who attend the convention as superdelegates should consider a candidate's ability to win in key states in the fall election before they pick a candidate. DAVID ESPO (AP)

Study: Stored Blood May Deteriorate

Heart patients given transfusions face fewer risks with fresher blood

ATLANTA | Heart surgery patients were more likely to die or suffer problems if they received transfusions of blood that is more than two weeks old rather than fresher blood, according to a new study that adds to the debate about the shelf

COLD STORAGE

→ Researchers looked at the records of patients who were given blood transfusions during heart-bypass or heart-valve surgery. The one-year survival rate was 89 percent for those who received blood stored for more than 14 days, but nearly 93 percent for patients who received fresher blood.

life of blood.

Although not the final word, the study underscores concerns that blood deteriorates with age and that rules allowing blood to be stored for six weeks may pose a safety risk for certain patients.

The findings bolster the argument of those who believe that older blood should be avoided, wrote Dr. John Adamson of the University of California at San Diego in an editorial accompanying the study in this week's New England Journal of Medicine.

"However, the results of this study will not settle the debate" because the patients studied were not representative of all transfusion recipients, he added.

The Food and Drug Administration allows blood centers to keep blood for six weeks. In a statement, the FDA said the findings were "provocative," but that more rigorous testing would be needed before it reviews the policy. MIKE STOBBE (AP)

Safer Cars Test Rescuers

Crews often struggle to cut through tough metals after a crash

TAMPA, FLA. | Capt. Clint Roberts makes his living cutting accident victims out of hideously mangled vehicles, but even he could hardly believe it when two people in a 2007 midsize car survived a head-on crash with a full-size pickup last year.

The Ford Fusion's reinforced steel construction probably saved the lives of the 18-year-old driver and his 16-year-old passenger. But Roberts said it gave his Hillsborough County Fire Rescue crew fits as they tried to free them last November.

"It was just beating the snot out of the tools," adding minutes and delaying medical treatment, Roberts said.

There is no question that today's cars save lives by cocooning motorists in reinforced alloys, impact-absorbing crumple zones and as many as a dozen air bags.

But in interviews with The Associated Press, rescue officials and experts from across the United States said the new technology is also hindering extrication of injured people, increasingly forcing crews to work deeper into the critical "golden hour" between accident and treatment by emergency room doctors. On many 2005 and later cars, an extrication that once took 10 or 15 minutes can now take twice that or longer.

To catch up, counties and cities are spending tens of thousands of dollars — if they can afford it — to buy more powerful equipment that can cut through newer cars' reinforced steel and the lighter, tougher exotic metals.

Experts cannot say for certain whether the delays in getting these victims to the hospital have resulted in people dying. But that's the fear.

The problem has rescue workers scrambling to update their tools and explore different ways to attack cars with their cutters, spreaders and saws. MITCH STACY (AP)

Scientists: Spring Is Arriving Earlier

Satellite images show Earth turning green a little sooner every year

WASHINGTON | The capital’s famous cherry trees are primed to burst out in a perfect pink peak at about the end of this month. Thirty years ago, the trees usually waited to bloom till around April 5.

In central California, the first of the field skipper sagem, a drab little butterfly, was fluttering about on March 12. Just 25 years ago, that creature predictably emerged there anywhere from mid-April to mid-May.

And sneezes are coming earlier in Philadelphia. On March 9, when allergist Dr. Donald Dvorin set up his monitor, maple pollen was already heavy in the air. Less than two decades ago, that pollen couldn’t be measured until late April.

Pollen is bursting. Critters are stirring. Biologists are worrying. “The alarm clock that all the plants and animals are listening to is running too fast,” Stanford University biologist Terry Root said.

Blame global warming.

The fingerprints of man-made climate change are evident in seasonal timing changes for thousands of species on Earth, according to dozens of studies and last year’s authoritative report by Nobel Prize-winning international climate scientists.

The change is so noticeable that scientists can track it from space. Satellites measuring when land turns green found that spring “green-up” is arriving eight hours earlier every year on average since 1982 north of the Mason-Dixon line.

There are winners, losers and lots of unknowns when global warming messes with natural timing. People may appreciate the reduced heating bills from shorter winters, the longer growing season and maybe even better tasting wines from some early grape harvests. But biologists also foresee big problems.

The changes could push some species to extinction. That’s because certain plants and animals are dependent on each other for food and shelter. If the plants bloom or bear fruit before animals return or surface from hibernation, the critters could starve. Also, plants that bud too early can still be whacked by a late freeze. Iraqis Pave Way for Elections

Presidential council approves measure for provincial vote by fall

BAGHDAD | Under strong U.S. pressure, Iraq's presidential council signed off Wednesday on a measure paving the way for provincial elections by the fall, a major step toward easing sectarian rifts as the nation marks the fifth anniversary of the war.

The decision by the council, made up of the country's president and two vice presidents, lays the groundwork for voters to choose new leaders of Iraq's 18 provinces.

The elections open the door to greater Sunni representation in regional administrations. Many Sunnis boycotted the last vote for provincial officials in January 2005, enabling Shiites and Kurds to win a disproportionate share of power.

Wednesday's decision came two days after Vice President Dick Cheney visited Baghdad to press Iraqi leaders to make progress in power-sharing deals.

Serbia recalled its ambassadors to Croatia and Hungary on Wednesday.

Supporters of Zimbabwean President Robert Mugabe dance during a rally.

Zimbabwe Vote May Be Flawed

Human rights groups say March 29 elections won't be free or fair

CAPE TOWN, SOUTH AFRICA | Serious electoral flaws and widespread political intimidation have made a mockery of claims by Zimbabwe's government that presidential and parliamentary elections later this month will be free and fair, human rights groups said Wednesday.

Human Rights Watch accused the government of violence against detractors, restricting freedom of assembly, using distribution of food and farming equipment to gain political advantage, and denying opponents access to the media before the elections on March 29.

"Despite some improvements on paper to the election regulations, Zimbabweans aren't free to vote for the candidates of their choice," the New York-based group said.

President Robert Mugabe, 84, is widely expected to win the presidential elections against Morgan Tsvangirai, leader of the Movement for Democratic Change, and a former finance minister and ruling party stalwart, Simba Makoni.

A separate report from the Observatory for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders also complained of violence and intimidation. As its team wound up a mission to Zimbabwe last month, militant ruling party youths and war veterans attacked teachers who were protesting against the economic meltdown. CLARE NULLIS (AP)

Pakistani Parliament Elects Female Speaker

Loyalist and look-alike of slain ex-PM Bhutto wins 249 of 324 votes

ISLAMABAD, PAKISTAN | Legislators elected Pakistan's first female speaker of parliament Wednesday, seating a follower — and look-alike — of assassinated former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto.

Fehmida Mirza's elevation reflected the air of liberalism in the country since voters delivered a resounding defeat to backers of President Pervez Musharraf, the former general who has been a close U.S. ally.

However, many Pakistanis worry

Fehmida Mirza, right, recites an oath to become the new speaker of Pakistan's parliament, next to outgoing speaker Chaudary Amir Hussain on Wednesday.

BAD PEOPLE GO TO HEAVEN GOOD PEOPLE DON'T

Why don't 'good' people go to heaven?

Because Jesus Christ himself said, 'only God is good.'

While we humans make the relative distinction between who is good and who is bad, a perfect and pure God has said that:

'All have sinned and come short of the glory of God.' (Romans 3:23)

Sin separates us from God and leads to spiritual death.

We cannot pay (atone) for our sins by:

Good deeds – 'By grace you have been saved through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not as a result of works.' (Ephesians 2:8,9)

Religion – 'By the works of the Law (10 Commandments) no flesh will be justified in His sight.' (Romans 3:20)

Demand for Gas May Drop

Fuel prices could rise high enough to make people rethink driving

NEW YORK | Florida dental products salesman Jean Laborde doesn't take as many fishing trips as he used to. Student Kaitlin Kelly has started carpooling to work and school in New Jersey.

Across the country, people already struggling with rising food prices, weak wage growth and falling home values are finding ways to manage the soaring cost of gasoline. They're combining errands, sharing rides, eliminating pleasure trips and using public transit more.

With pump prices averaging $3.28 per gallon and expected to peak between $3.50 and $4 this spring, the question becomes: When will drivers begin using significantly less gas? And once they do, will prices fall?

Experts point to California for one answer. Last November, demand plummeted by 3.7 percent as prices soared past $3.40 per gallon.

That drop is extraordinary, considering gas consumption normally grows about 1.5 percent per year, said Tom Kloza, publisher and chief oil analyst at the Oil Price Information Service in Wall, N.J.

Potential gasoline prices are displayed as a selling point for a small sedan at a Suzuki dealership outside Denver, Colo. Sales of gas-guzzling SUVs are dropping.

Across the country, people are finding ways to manage the soaring cost of gasoline.

That indicates some consumers began changing driving habits between that price and $3.40 per gallon.

Sales of gas-guzzling SUVs are plunging as consumers shift to smaller, more fuel-efficient cars. The American Public Transportation Association says Americans took 10.3 billion trips on public buses and trains last year, the highest level in 50 years and a 2.1 percent increase from 2006.

So far, there's little evidence that falling consumption is lowering gas prices, which have jumped to several new national records in recent days, despite the downturn in demand. Prices in California didn't nosedive after November: They kept rising and now average $3.631 per gallon, highest in the nation.

Eventually, economists believe, a downturn in gasoline consumption will bring prices down.

POWERFUL PROTEST: A woman is arrested outside the IRS building Wednesday and protesters wearing orange jumpsuits stand near the White House to protest the fifth anniversary of the start of the Iraq war.

52 Arrested in Iraq War Protests

Mass demonstrations mark 5th anniversary of U.S. invasion of Iraq

WASHINGTON | Police arrested more than 30 people who crossed a barricade and blocked entrances at the Internal Revenue Service building Wednesday morning, the start of a day of protests nationwide that marked the fifth anniversary of the U.S. invasion of Iraq.

A marching band led protesters down the street near the National Mall and around the IRS building before about 100 gathered at the main entrance. As police began the arrests, some protesters shouted "This is a crime scene" and "You're arresting the wrong people."

The demonstrators said they were focusing on the IRS, among other institutions, because it gathers taxes used to fund the war.

A spokeswoman for the Federal Protective Service said 32 people were arrested.

Later Wednesday, about 20 protesters were arrested on Independence Avenue about a block from the U.S. Capitol. Police made the arrests after the protesters, dressed mostly in black with white masks, stood in place blocking traffic. In some cases, police had to drag the protesters off the street.

Hundreds of protesters gathered downtown at noon for an action called "Funk the War." With music blaring, the crowd marched and danced in the middle of the street for hours, blocking traffic as they went. Police pushed them out of the way when they lingered at major intersections. Some of the protesters used chalk to draw peace symbols and antiwar messages on the pavement.

Earlier, about 150 people, mostly with the group Veterans for Peace, marched down Independence Avenue.

Many of them carried upside-down American flags, which they said symbolized a nation in distress.

A couple of miles away at the American Petroleum Institute, protesters chanted "No blood for oil!" and tried to block traffic by sitting in the street and linking arms. At least once, they were dragged away by police.

NATIONAL CONCERN

Demonstration events were held across the country Wednesday to protest the fifth anniversary of the start of the war in Iraq:

- In New York City, the Granny Peace Brigade sang songs and counted the war dead outside the military recruiting station in Times Square, which was recently the target of a bomb.
- Black balloons were tied to trees along San Francisco's main downtown thoroughfare, and protesters at a table offered "unhappy birthday cake" to passers-by.

Giant Panda Artificially Inseminated

National Zoo will not know for months if Mei Xiang is pregnant breeding season per year. It could be months, though, before scientists know whether the insemination was successful.

Mei Xiang has been successfully artificially inseminated before, leading to the birth of cub Tai Shan in 2005.

Scientists tried to artificially inseminate Mei Xiang last April with semen taken from Gao Gao, a giant panda at the San Diego Zoo. But they determined in July that Mei Xiang was not pregnant. (AP)

FIRST-TIMERS: Maybe the play-in game is good for something. Mount Saint Mary's 69-60 win over Coppin State Tuesday gave the school its first NCAA tournament victory. In the school's preview appearances, it lost to Kentucky by 46 in 1995 and to Michigan State by 23 in 1999.

NCAA TOURNAMENT | ROUND ONE

east

No. 12 over No. 5

Nobody knows how to pull an upset like George Mason (No. 12), and Notre Dame is known for first-round exits (see last year's loss to Winthrop).

No. 11 over No. 6

The sixth-seeded Oklahoma Sooners didn't score even 60 points in eight of their losses this year. St. Joseph's played its way into the tournament with two wins over a good Xavier team.

midwest

No. 13 over No. 4

Vanderbilt (No. 4) has lost three of its last five games, and, just like Notre Dame, is a product of a really great home-court advantage. Cue Siena.

No. 10 over No. 7

Davidson has won 22 straight and has the in-state advantage over Gonzaga, which travels across the country to Raleigh, N.C.

south

No. 12 over No. 5

Two reasons to pick No. 12 Temple: The Owls won the A-10 tourney, and their opponent, Michigan State, comes out of the awful Big 10. One reason to shy away: Tom Izzo, one of the best tournament coaches there is.

No. 10 over No. 7

Does anyone actually think No. 7 seed Miami is for real? St. Mary's, on the other hand, could be.

west

No. 11 over No. 6

The Big 10 factor may strike again — this time for No. 6 seed Purdue — and sentiment has to be on Baylor's side after what that program went through. Then again, the 11th-seeded Bears lost six of their last 10 games.

No. 14 over No. 3

The 14th-seeded Georgia Bulldogs' beating Xavier isn't likely. But no one is hotter than Georgia, which won two games in one day and four straight in the SEC tourney. MATT SWENSON (EXPRESS)

Vaughan Gets His Chance to Dance

Star guard missed Mason's Final Four in '06 due to an ACL tear

GEORGE MASON HOOPS | In high school, John Vaughan and Folarin Campbell talked about going to the same college. When they got to George Mason four years ago, they roomed together and talked about turning the program around and taking the Patriots to the NCAA tournament. They did almost everything together.

But when the Patriots made their historic run to the Final Four, Vaughan wasn't on the court — he was on the bench with a knee injury.

"To see that group bring it together the way we did that year ... it was great to see those guys go out there and play as hard as they did, as well as they did," Vaughan says.

The Laurel, Md., product came to Mason as arguably the most highly recruited of the group that, with Campbell and Will Thomas, was called the best class ever recruited by coach Jim Larranaga. As a freshman, he averaged 23 minutes and 7.5 points per game, fourth on the team, and was the only member of that heralded freshman class to make the CAA all-rookie team.

Then, before his sophomore season could even get started, Vaughan torn his ACL. He missed the entire season, and he says it devastated him to not be able to play.

"Watching the team go out there and perform to great heights — it was tough," Vaughan says. "Ever since then, it's been a goal of mine to help this team get back to the tournament."

Now he has that chance. This season, with Vaughan healthy, the threesome that includes him, Campbell and Thomas is averaging more than 48 points per game. On Thursday, the Patriots will play in the first round of the NCAA tournament in Denver, and they will be underdogs just like last time — this time against Notre Dame and Big East player of the year Luke Harangody.

"We're going up against a tough team," Vaughan said. "But if we do the things we're supposed to do, we should be fine." IAN HERBERT (EXPRESS)

Bulldogs Continue an Unlikely Story

Will Georgia have anything left after its miraculous SEC run?

NCAA TOURNEY | Dennis Felton had nothing to say Monday, which was certainly understandable.

Actually, though, Felton's silent treatment wasn't by choice: "He has no voice, not even a little growl," assistant Pete Herrmann said.

Georgia (17-16) is heading to the NAAs for the first time since 2002, a seemingly lost season turned upside down when the Bulldogs won the SEC tournament.

To call it a miracle might be a bit of a stretch. But not by much.

After winning only four SEC games during the regular season, the last-place Bulldogs won four games in four days — two of which came in overtime and two of which came on the same day, thanks to a tornado that ripped through Atlanta. They beat Kentucky for the first time in the SEC tournament, and defeated SEC West champion Mississippi State

"Their story is the kind of thing

The next mountain comes Thursday against No. 3 seed Xavier at Verizon Center in Washington. (AP)

Tourney Berth Is Rebirth for Baylor

Players never thought they'd move past the tragedy of 5 years ago

NCAA TOURNEY | Baylor's revival begins with a sordid tale, one involving the murder of a player by a former teammate and despicable acts by a former coach, who was found to have improperly paid for players' tuition.

And the Bears know that story will be told over and over again now that they are in the NCAA tournament, five years after one of the worst scandals in college basketball history.

"Thinking about days like this and thinking about going to the tournament weren't even in the picture," senior guard Aaron Bruce recalled of his arrival at Baylor.

"What happened is not going to be forgotten, but we just want to kind of put it behind us," sophomore Tweety Carter said.

The Bears (21-10), the last of the

65 teams revealed on Sunday, are the No. 11 seed in the West Regional. They play their first NCAA tournament game in 20 years against No. 6 seed Purdue (24-8) in Washington, D.C., on Thursday.

"No one had really gone through something like this, you really couldn't follow a map," said Scott Drew, who took over as coach in 2003. "We just worked 24-7, and that's all we really could do to get things going in the right direction." (AP)

Red Sox Rescind Threat of Boycott

BASEBALL | The Boston Red Sox ended a threatened boycott Wednesday of their final spring training game in Florida, resolving a dispute over paying coaches for the season-opening trip to Japan.

The game against Toronto started an hour late when the team voted unanimously not to play or go to Tokyo after learning coaches and staff would not get a $40,000 appearance fee for the Japan trip. Players said they believed that fee was part of the deal.

"Everyone connected with the trip will be fairly compensated," baseball spokesman Rich Levin said.

Red Sox spokesman John Blake would not say how it was resolved. "We're going to Japan," he said. (AP)

Arizona at Home in NCAAs

Wildcats have made 24 straight tourneys, but it was close this year

NCAA TOURNEY | For perhaps the first time in this turbulent season, the Arizona Wildcats find themselves in a familiar place.

The No. 10-seeded Wildcats will make their 24th straight

9:40 P.M.
CBS, THURS.

appearance in the NCAA tournament, the nation's longest active streak, when they meet seventh-seeded West Virginia on Thursday in Washington, D.C.

"I'm ecstatic that these guys are still getting a chance to keep playing and keep practicing and getting a chance to show who they are," interim coach Kevin O'Neill said. "I think we're going to play a lot more basketball."

In some ways, drawing an NCAA berth represents a victory for the Wildcats (19-14), who are no longer among the national elite and have been reduced to sweating out

Jerryd Bayless, left, and the Wildcats made the tourney, thanks to a tough schedule.

BRACKET CLOSEUP

Selection Sunday. Arizona squeezed into the tourney on the strength of its nonconference schedule, which included road trips to Memphis, Kansas and UCLA, all of which earned No. 1 seeds on Sunday.

"I never thought coming to Arizona we would be a bubble team, but it happens and things happen for a reason," star freshman Jerryd Bayless said. "Hopefully, we can win some games in the tournament."

If the Wildcats beat the Mountaineers (24-10), they'll likely run into No. 2-seed Duke. The Blue Devils are heavy favorites against Belmont in the opening round.

ANDREW BAGNATO (AP)

At Doral, Everyone Has A Case of Tiger Envy

Players try to stop Woods at a tourney he's won 3 straight years

GOLF | There are 78 players at this World Golf Championship, and one guy playing out of this world.

Tiger Woods is winning at a rate not seen in more than a half-century. Bay Hill was his sixth straight victory around the world among official tournaments, and he is the three-time defending champion this week at the CA Championship at Doral.

"He inhales so many wins that there's not much breathing room for the rest of us," Stewart Cink said.

There is a sense of awe among Woods' peers during a stretch of golf that rivals Byron Nelson's golden season of 1945, when he won 11 straight events and 18 out of 30. And there is determination not to let this domination continue.

"It's a great time to be playing," Adam Scott said. "It's awfully hard to beat him, but he doesn't play every week. I know he's winning all the time, but he doesn't win every week, either."

Then the 27-year-old Australian paused long enough that he couldn't contain a wry smile.

"There's no proof of that," Scott said. "But we'll try to change it this week." DOUG FERGUSON (AP)

Adults Acting Out

Stage parents give off ugly vibes on 'I Know My Kid's a Star'

TIMEOUT | Danny Bonaduce, the former child star of “The Partridge Family” and current celebrity train wreck wants to give back by hosting “I Know My Kid’s a Star” (10 p.m., VH1), an eight-week showcase for young talent and their stage parents. At the end of the process, some young performer will get a break, his mother or father will receive an education in the hard-knock life of Hollywood, and together they will receive a $50,000 check.

ROLE MODEL: Host Danny Bonaduce is what child stars can hope to become!

The kids and their parents were supposedly chosen for their talents and potential “it” factor. But they were clearly selected to add to the show’s freak-show quotient. I’m speaking of the adults here, who get down to feuding and fighting almost immediately.

Speaking without an ounce of irony or self-awareness, one stage parent likens her role to that of Judy Garland's mother. One dad treats his tap-dancing son like the mute half of a ventriloquist act.

The gathering gets off to an auspicious start when one young contestant vomits upon meeting Bonaduce. Reality TV producers must live for such moments. All of the editing tricks in the world can't produce a real live regurgitation! KEVIN MCDONOUGH (UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE)

No Pain, Huge Gain

Health

A 'boot camp' teaches patients to manage injuries, chronic pain

Ballet teacher Gayle Parseghian thought she might never dance again after she suffered a back injury while moving heavy furniture that left her with unrelenting pain.

But an intensive, four-week "boot camp" got the 55-year-old dancer from Toledo, Ohio, back to the barre. The program at the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago taught her to manage the chronic pain that had tormented her for more than a year.

"It affects your relationship with your spouse, your family, your friends, your boss," she said. "It's a feeling of being completely out of control."

New research suggests chronic pain affects the brain's ability to rest, disrupting a system that normally charges up some brain regions and powers down others when a person relaxes.

The early findings could explain the sleep disturbances, decision-making problems and mood changes that often accompany chronic pain, he said.

And they could explain why the boot camp approach worked for Parseghian.

NEW TREATMENT: Gayle Parseghian stretches at a "camp" to treat chronic pain.

The Chicago program, affiliated with Northwestern's medical school, attacks pain on three fronts — biological, psychological and social. It doesn't claim to cure chronic pain, but instead gives patients tools to lessen its hold on their lives.

Patients spend Monday through Friday stretching, exercising and moving in new ways. They meet with a physician, an occupational therapist, a physical therapist, a biofeedback therapist, a clinical psychologist and a movement specialist.

They may address depression or sleep problems or adjust their medications. Getting all of these things under one roof differs from most approaches to treating chronic pain, said Dr. Steven Stanos, the program's medical director.

Patients know the drill. In the fragmented world of health care, they bounce from chiropractor to massage therapist to surgeon — with none of the experts sharing information.

"You will try anything and everything to get out of the pain," Parseghian said. She tried herbal patches, vitamins and prescription narcotics. Nothing worked.

Surgery would have been next. She was in a surgeon's waiting room when she read an article about the boot camp.

Two weeks into the boot camp, Parseghian's husband visited her in Chicago for the weekend. Later, he phoned her with an observation.

"You didn't say one thing about your pain or the back. That used to monopolize our conversations," her husband told her.

Two weeks later, she headed home with a detailed schedule for her first week back, including plenty of time to relax. She knew the staff would check with her in another four weeks. And she was armed with breathing techniques and phrases to repeat when she suffered a flare-up: "This has happened before. ... I'm going to be OK."

During her second week home, she reported, "I took my first ballet class last week. I thought that day would never come." CARLAK. JOHNSON (AP)

Humane law officers spend most of their time handling people

You want to work with animals, and you've seen those animal cops shows on TV. You're intrigued by the idea of locking up abusers and throwing away the keys.

But it's not all about animals — or law enforcement, either. Humane law enforcement officers agree on the most important thing to know about their job: "The majority of time is spent dealing with people, not with animals," says Adam Parascandola, director of Oakland Animal Services in Oakland, Calif.

Scott Giacoppo, chief of field services for the Washington Humane Society in Washington, D.C., estimates that humane law enforcement officers spend 85 to 90 percent of their time on education and only 10 percent on prosecution.

"We go out to every situation

Veterinarians speak with a humane law enforcement officer about an injured cat.

with the idea of making it better for the animal," he says.

But this doesn't mean making an arrest every time you find a skinny dog. "Maybe they're [the owners] giving table scraps — they can't afford dog food. Maybe we can donate some food to help them over a tough time. Or maybe it would be best for the pet to try to place them into a new home."

Giacoppo stresses, however, that you do need an interest in law enforcement. You must respect the law even when it differs from your own point of view.

"One of the most common problems we face is when people feel bad

"We go out to every situation with the idea of making it better for the animal."

SCOTT GIACOPPO,
WASHINGTON HUMANE SOCIETY

for the life of the animal but there's no law being broken," he says. "A lot of people can't do what we do because we're bound by the law. Let's say my personal opinion is that every cat should be sleeping on the bed. I can't force them to do that. That can get frustrating."

Humane law enforcement officers come from a variety of backgrounds, and job titles may involve different duties depending on the setup of the particular agency.

The Washington Humane Society has separate humane law enforcement officers and animal control officers. The law enforcement officers have the primary responsibility for enforcing the anti-cruelty laws — those prohibiting animal abuse and neglect. The animal control officers handle other animal-related laws, such as those regulating loose dogs.

In Oakland, they're all called animal control officers, and their job includes enforcement of the humane laws. In some places, such as Massachusetts, humane law officers are full police officers.

No specific educational background is required, and either law enforcement or animal handling experience can be a way in to the profession.

But people skills are always a priority. Parascandola says that experience in customer service is a big plus. "You have to be willing to go out there and face people who are yelling at you," says Parascandola.

Both Parascandola and Giacoppo warn that there are frustrating parts of their days: "There's a lot of paperwork," says Parascandola. "Court dates are long and tiring. Sometimes you sit around all day just to find the case is continued."

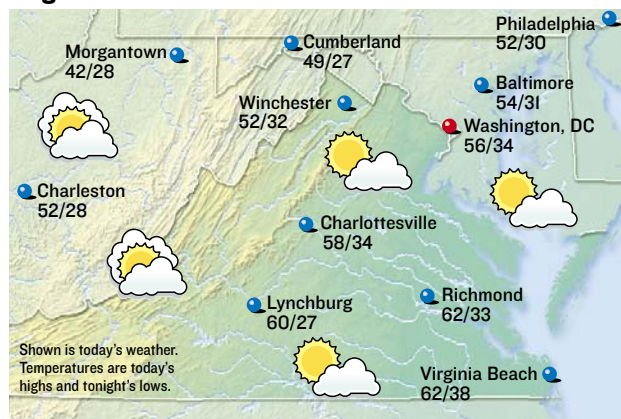

But they speak warmly of how it feels to know they've rescued animals and given them the chance at a better life.

"You take cats out of a house with a hundred cats — now they each have their own clean cage and litter," says Giacoppo, "you can hear a whole room of cats purring — that's the reward." LINDA LOMBARDI (AP)

Make a loud fashion statement by mixing bright, vibrant colors

The message from the fashion world isn't just to wear color — it's to wear several colors at once. One trend is color-blocking, putting chunks of color all over your outfit in a very mod sort of way.

Sound scary? It needn't be.

"If you're wearing that color-blocked dress on that day, that is your fashion statement. Your outfit is complete. You have your statement piece and you can move on," says dress designer Lisa Perry, who draws inspiration from the geometric, pop-art style of Piet Mondrian. "It actually is the art of dressing simply."

Using abstract chunks of color actually is an easy way to incorporate bright color into your wardrobe, according to Nordstrom fashion director Gregg Andrews, because — depending on your color combinations — you can end up with a more understated and sophisticated look than a floral. "There's a modernity to it that looks really sharp right now," he says.

One swath of bright yellow or cobalt blue against a backdrop of black lets you wear the spring trend without it wearing you, he says.

Perry, however, makes the case that anyone can wear even bolder hues. It's just a matter of finding the right ones, she says, acknowledging that it took her dozens of tries to come up with shades of orange, hot pink and turquoise that could be worn together.

OK, that might be too much for you — at first. Try a mostly turquoise dress, keeping that one color near the face, with bright orange pockets or a hot pink hemline.

Color-blocking is definitely a trend meant to be worn by the masses this spring, not just the designer customer, says Suze Yalof Schwartz, Glamour's fashion editor at large. She notes that DKNY and Vera Wang's Lavender Label are offering the look along with top-tier designers Marni and Chloe.

She recommends buying a garment that's already color-blocked for you, though, instead of creating your own with a top, belt and skirt — all in different colors. "I love how Jil Sander did it with pieces, but the designer there [Raf Simmons] knows what he's doing," she says.

One insider trick Yalof Schwartz does offer is to wear neutral-colored shoes no matter which hues are part of your outfit: "I prefer when you match your shoes to your skin tone. It will make legs look longer."

Perry also suggests nude-colored fishnet stockings, even if she's wearing green tights with her green, turquoise and royal blue dress and black patent leather pumps with a flash of royal blue on them.

"Color goes with your personality. You have to feel comfortable being looked at," Perry says. "Even if you look good in hot pink, don't wear it if you don't want to be noticed."

She adds: "What you want to hear is, 'You look so great,' not 'I love the dress.'" SAMANTHA CRITCHELL (AP)

Primed For Heaven

We've always felt there's a special place in hell for make-up primers, which tell women the stuff they've been buying doesn't work without MORE stuff UNDER it. So, we scoffed at TOO FACED SHADOW INSURANCE ($17, Sephora). It felt greasy and thin; it looked wrong for most skin tones. And we were wrong. Our metallic eye shadow usually sprinkles itself all over our cheeks, and not a stray speck was to be found. A little bit mixed with some dark shadow made a smoky, smudgy eyeliner. In all, the devil doesn't have this one's soul yet. HOLLY J. MORRIS (EXPRESS)

Lots of little girls love playing dress-up. When some grow up and become celebrities, they play designer make-believe all over again. Move over, Nicky Hilton and Lauren Conrad; Rachel Bilson is the next starlet with fashion aspirations. This fall, she'll launch the EDIE ROSE BY DKNY JEANS collection. Looks include tuxedo jackets, shift dresses and jeans, with prices ranging from $34 to $98. Silly Rachel! Why didn't you do this before "The O.C." went buh-bye? Quick Fix Meals

ROBIN MILLER, popular host of the Food Network's "Quick Fix Meals," was online Wednesday to offer cooking tips and discuss her new book, "Robin to the Rescue."

Is your book formatted similar to your show? Is each main ingredient incorporated in several additional recipes intended for days later in the week?

Yes, my book is just like my show. Each recipe gives you several options for how you can get it to the table, meaning I explain how you can prep in advance, make it a "meal kit," morph the extras into completely new dishes, "slow-cook it," and "bank a batch" in the freezer for enjoying later.

It's hard for me to understand how some other chefs call dishes nutritional when they're so high in sodium. Can you recommend some good quick meals with healthy sodium levels?

All of my meals take sodium into consideration (I'm a nutritionist, so it's important to me). I use reduced-sodium soy sauce and other bottled sauces and I always opt for reduced-sodium broths. For quick meals, stick to REAL foods (meat, fish, fresh vegetables) — it's the processed foods (canned foods, prepared sauces) that really pack in the salt.

I'm always looking for family-friendly vegetarian meals that don't take hours to make. Any suggestions?

Have you tried the new quick-cooking brown rice? It's awesome and takes just 90 seconds to heat. You can serve that under a mixture of fresh vegetables, beans, diced tomatoes, basil, and oregano for a fabulous Italian-style meal.

Horoscope

By Stella Wilder

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) It's important for you to ask the right questions at the right time. Take advantage of another's generosity; get the answers you need.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) A false step on your part early in the day is sure to be remembered — and you must take the trouble to think about it and learn from it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) A question of equality demands attention, either at home or at the workplace. You're going to have to compromise at some point.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) A secret you've been trying to keep for some time is likely to leak before the day is out; others will be more understanding than you expect.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Though you're confident that practice will make perfect, be ready to abandon any effort that simply will not pay off.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Don't let pride get in your way; it's best to know when you are mistaken — and to admit it in a timely fashion. Let someone else take over.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) The promise a loved one makes to you will soon be put to the test, but you have no reason to doubt that he or she will not keep it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Someone may be jealous of your own recent victory, but there's no reason for this to get in the way of a blossoming friendship.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) The only thing worse than a bad loser is a bad winner — so be sure to be gracious, no matter which you may be.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Tradition will be a big part of your day — but in a way that is not overt or obvious. You're connected to the past — now and forever.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A disappointment waits just around the next corner, but if you deal with it in the right way, you can impress others and satisfy yourself.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Watch, listen and learn — there is much going on around you that you will need to be familiar with when it's your turn to take charge.

Citizens Have Right to Guns

GUN VIOLENCE IN D.C. is terrible ("High Court Debates Gun Ban," March 19). It seems every week a young person in D.C. is wounded or killed by an illegal gun. Self-defense is the most commonly used reason for having a gun, but, according to research, it is unclear how often these guns are used for self-protection against unprovoked attacks. I do believe D.C. residents should have the right to own a gun. I also believe gun ownership demands great responsibility.

✱ NAME: Scott Schuman
GIG: The Sartorialist

SCHUMAN IS AN upbeat New Yorker who photographs people wearing clothes on the streets of New York, Milan and Paris, then posts them on his blog, thesartorialist.blogspot.com, whereupon readers comment. His increasingly popular enterprise recalls Bill Cunningham's famous Sunday shots in the New York Times retooled for gabby Internet internationalists. A selection of Schuman's real-life chic — of women made more gorgeous by their choices, of regular guys in short pants or maroon gloves — is on display at Adamson Gallery through April 6. The show demonstrates the Indiana native's abiding admiration for individuality and deep craftsmanship.

What was your originating idea?
I wanted to show how I thought designers would see. A lot of shots I put up, I wouldn't wear anything they're wearing, but there's something about the vitality of the person.

You offer specifics instead of generalities.

You see different body types and people mixing old with new. And you get to hear what other people's reactions are.

Without the fashion-world nastiness?

I think when you get a lot of people together, there's always insecurity. If you get a lot of paper-supply guys together, you're going to get probably the same kind of thing.

For you, it's about the clothes.

The clothes and what my story is of the person.

Is it liberating, not getting hung up on price tags?

The expensive things don't make my life any better, and the cheap things don't make my life any better. I'm not making judgments. I love bespoke; I like the craftsmanship. I'm outside running around, but I find it romantic, to sit quietly in a room and sew beautiful things in a singular setting. But I can certainly appreciate guys who are doing a different thing.

Do you approach men's and women's fashion differently?

I shoot men's on instinct and women's on experience. My professional background was in women's, so, there, I shoot from my point of view of what looks beautiful. The guys look like regular guys who have great style.

"I find it romantic, to sit quietly in a room and sew beautiful things."

And they do shake things up.

If you go to stores in Milan, those guys are wearing it, and they're living it. Instead of dummifying it down, I show what those guys in Milan are wearing. ... American color palettes include more bold, bright color because we're so sports-influenced. I'm excited to come back from Europe and see how girls on the Lower East Side mix, like, vintage. It doesn't quite fit, but they're so gorgeous, they know they can get away with it.

Out of the Airhead

A sheltered teen wife inches toward liberty in Woolly's 'Stunning'

STAGE | The first thing one notices on the set of Woolly Mammoth's new play, David Adjmi's "Stunning," is its sheer whiteness. The furniture is white, the walls, even child-bride Lily's (Laura Heisler) boots — all white. In the words of one character, "You live in an igloo!"

All the better to stage a complex and eventually messy character study. Set in a Syrian-Jewish Brooklyn neighborhood, the play explores the suffocating world of Lily, who at 16 has married the much older Ike (Michael Gabriel Goodfriend).

A vapid and sheltered girl, Lily spends her time hanging with her sister and friend, chomping gum, getting manicures and gossiping in pig Latin. Lily's world expands when she hires Blanche (Quincy Tyler Bernstine), an intelligent and worldly black maid who Lily dubs Anna Maria because she prefers her maids Puerto Rican.

TINY BABY STEPS: David Adjmi's "Stunning" proves that age is not just a number.

Ike, who began courting Lily when she was 12, slaves over his physique and saves his unbridled affection for his goldfish, Kitty. He wants 10 kids, immediately, while Lily takes birth control on the sly.

Much to the volatile and controlling Ike's displeasure, Blanche guides Lily into self-awareness. The more independence Lily exerts, the more the brutality simmering under Ike's surface boils over. But as Lily comes to depend on Blanche, it's clear that Blanche is keeping secrets of her own.

Set designer Dan Conway deserves special mention for his pristine yet functional set, which displays the rooms in Lily's and Ike's modern and minimalist home with a mere flick of a switch.

Directed by Anne Kauffman, "Stunning" delivers a brilliant first act but goes a little off the rails in its closing scenes. ERIN TROMPETER

Fanfare for the Common Man

August Wilson's plays put soul back in American theater

STAGE | August Wilson is widely regarded as America's playwright. Through his cycle of 10 plays, each chronicling a different decade of the 20th-century black experience in Pennsylvania, he invented dialogues and dialects that had been brewing in cafés, in music halls and in bus stations across the country.

In his narrative universe, time, space and symbology get mixed together like a gumbo and are set on a slow, roiling boil from decade to decade and curtain to curtain. After his 2005 death, obituaries by peers and critics alike christened Wilson the poet of American theater.

He covered the bases, from the disintegrating trammels of slavery through the evolving (and potentially evaporating) poetry of speech in Pittsburgh's Hill District (where the author lived) via the residents' conflicted assimilation into the white man's kingdom of money, stocks and bonds, and real estate takeovers.

The Kennedy Center is boldly presenting the cycle in full, now through April 6. The festival's artistic director, Kenny Leon, spoke to Express about bringing these works together as a singular experience. "He's the best writer in the American theater because he wrote about all men," said Leon. "He wrote for all of us. He wrote about the common man, the deli man, the jobless man."

Mounting all 10 works over the course of a two-month period, Leon corralled the talents of seven directors and a troupe of actors who portray multiple characters in plays that overlap and link together in succession.

"This helps diversify the programming at the Kennedy Center and gives August's work room to breathe and stay awhile," he said. "For a writer of this type of work to be brought to the commercial world, and on this scale, is unheard of."

Wilson spoke for folks whose stories were as compelling as those of kings.

It is this approach that enables each work to stand alone and then fold into the next, like Venn diagrams approximating the journey of a culture, a race, a history. "You'll hear how [his 1990s-era play] 'Radio Golf,' talks to [his turn-of-the-century play] 'Gem of the Ocean.' It's as if each play were cut from the same cloth and patched together in this celebration of the man and the writing."

August Wilson's legacy lies in his ability to point out the unique, the special, the outcast, the impossible, and then find a way to cultivate and celebrate them like a garden. He places families of characters — bound not by blood but by experience — on a stage and invites audiences in like a reunion.

Leon asserted that was why "we wanted to premiere the festival at the Kennedy Center, at the nation's ultimate center for the arts. By presenting 'August Wilson's America' to audiences, we're bringing together every story and everyone he touched, under one roof. I want people to hear his voice. I want to keep August Wilson alive."

Philosopher's Sax

Steve Lehman on jazz, innovation and instrumentalism

MUSIC | Brooklyn-born musician and composer Steve Lehman is a jazz alto saxophone heavyweight. For that instrument's improvisers, to be considered as such has come to mean one who is impressively complex or deftly experimental.

Jazz alto legends Jackie McLean, Ornette Coleman and Eric Dolphy were some of the first to tilt jazz toward the avant-garde and cross over into classical music territory. The brainiacs of the idiom, alto sax cats have typically taken a backseat acclamation-wise to ubiquitous tenor types.

Lehman isn't necessarily out to change that. In fact, he's not even that keen on referring to his music as "jazz" — despite being named a "rising star" on his instrument by Downbeat magazine in 2006 and 2007.

"The problem with the term 'jazz,' for me, is that it's too vague," Lehman says. He admits, though, that the musicians he most identifies with work within that style.

"Jackie McLean changed the whole trajectory of my life," Lehman says.

The late Jackie McLean was once a teacher of Lehman's. The young musician, who also studied under innovative reedman and composer Anthony Braxton, is currently finishing up studies at Columbia University, where he is a doctrinal candidate in musical composition.

It was in McLean's music that Lehman first heard something significant — something that imparted more than just jazz's historical and technical connotations. On his new album, "On Meaning," Lehman employs both technique and soul in seeking to express the inexpressible.

CONCEPT & EXECUTION: Lehman eschews labels but wows aficionados.

On the song "Great Plains of Algiers," Lehman's quintet tackles timbre head-on using "spectral" harmony techniques that he learned from his current mentor, French composer Tristan Murail. "If it works, the instruments should sound well-blended," Lehman says.

The New York artist also likes to blend sounds with computers when he's not writing theses and wowing jazz society. Audiences will gain insight into this particular side of the artist Saturday when he gives a solo performance as part of the Spontaneous Infinity music series at the Velvet Lounge.

"Working with [computers] opens doors in composition," Lehman says. "If I can use it in a meaningful way, anyone could."

A River of Death and Mystery

'Portia Coughlan' dives into questions of madness and memory

STAGE | "It's a part that any actress would want to play," says Linda Murray of her role as the title character in Solas Nua's production of "Portia Coughlan." "You're kind of like Hamlet and Ophelia rolled into one."

Murray, who is also the company's artistic director, plays a woman drawn to the river where her twin brother drowned 15 years earlier and possibly haunted by his ghost. "That's the central question that the audience will have to answer," says Murray. "Is she mad, or has her brother really come back?"

After "The Mai" in 2006, "Portia Coughlan" is the second play Solas Nua has produced by Irish playwright Marina Carr, who Murray describes as "one of the most prominent playwrights we have at home working today." Carr, who writes in a style Murray describes as "poetic realism," combines bleak drama with fine comedy, Shakespearean and classic Greek dramatic elements as she plumbs the depths of family and national identities.

Jessica Burgess' direction brings these elements to the fore, giving the story an operatic heft. Marie-Audrey Désy's spare, dark set could host any Shakespeare tragedy, and the supporting cast is uniformly strong, especially Rusty Clauss as the feisty matriarch who commands the stage from her throne-like wheelchair.

But it's Murray who anchors the show dramatically and emotionally. Aside from the short second act, she not only appears in every scene, but she is the focus of every scene.

"It's draining," Murray says. "Because Portia is so on the edge, I really have to go into myself and find places I probably didn't want to think about."

In addition, she must maintain a fine ambiguity: "I'm sure some people will walk out saying she was sane, and others will walk out saying she was a lunatic," Murray explains. "I don't think that's a question for the production to answer."

Funk for the Future

Once an essential sideman, Amp Fiddler is now a solo star

MUSIC | He's been in the game for nearly 30 years, but Amp Fiddler is still a newcomer as a solo artist. Renowned for pecking out funky melodies and imbuing them with vivid retro-futuristic textures, Fiddler ranked as one of the most in-demand keyboardists, playing with such acts as the Dramatics, Was (Not Was), Enchantment and George Clinton's P-Funk All-stars.

It wasn't until 2003 that Joseph "Amp" Fiddler emerged as a formidable solo artist, first thanks to some inventive 12-inch singles on the U.K.-based label Genuine, and later for his outstanding 2004 album, "Waltz of the Ghetto Fly." Boasting contributions from Clinton and Raphael Saadiq, the album spanned the black music innovations of his Detroit hometown, fusing jazz, Motown, P-Funk, hip-hop and electronica. More impressive was Fiddler's ability to forge a distinct personality that prevented this survey from being a pastiche.

While connecting with Detroit's new generation of future funk (J Dilla, Moodymann, John Arnold, Paul Randolph), Fiddler proved he had lasting power on his 2006 sophomore disc, "Afro-Strut," which featured Corrine Bailey Rae, Tony Allen and Stephanie McKay.

"The best part of being in the music business is having your own situation, especially after being with so many other groups," says Fiddler. "At first it was hard, because it was new for me and there were a lot of things to consider, like directing a band, arrangements. I really don't believe in having a musical director."

He did rise to the occasion, of course, becoming not just a studio maverick but an in-concert showman. "My first solo gigs were in Detroit for the Electronic Music Festival. And those gigs weren't always so comfortable at first. I wasn't used to being in the front. Once I went to Europe and started performing more, that's when I really got comfortable," he says.

Fiddler's fan base is stronger in Europe than in the States. Nevertheless, he enthralled a full house at the 9:30 Club three years ago, and he'll probably pack the house again on Saturday night as he shares the bill with fellow underground soul soldiers Tortured Soul and Fertile Ground. JOHN MURPH

Hard-Boiled, Heavily Baked

Robert Mitchum made easy work of the toughest stuff

FILM | Robert Mitchum was a leading man who knew his way around a dame, a frame and a drag. He could turn a B-picture into an A just by showing up.

Not Humphrey Bogart home-ly or Cary Grant handsome, Mitchum was a beguiling in-between. Droopy-lidded, he had a vaguely rabbit profile, with a prominent nose and a down-sloping mouth whose heavy upper lip was sculpted to dangle a smoke. He looked like an elegantly wasted Hirschfeld caricature of himself.

An icon of cool so reliable that tough-guy culture critic Dave Hickey used Mitchum-love as a girlfriend litmus test, the laconic actor never strained, never stumbled. All six-plus feet of him glided devil-may-care across the black-and-white, making fatalism so sexy no French existentialist could touch him. Mitchum had help, of course. In a sane society, he wouldn't have gotten hard time for his taste for the sweet leaf, but that's not to say the guy didn't earn it every day of his life.

The AFI Silver's tribute starts with a double feature of rarely screened noirs, "When Strangers Marry" and "Crossfire," as well as "Out of the Past." Jacques Tourneur's once-underrated classic finds Mitchum on a long, slow simmer, little caring whether he makes it out alive so long as everyone else goes down with him. Kirk Douglas has a scene-stealing turn as a prim little gangster who likes his revenge served somewhere around absolute zero.

Next month's "The Night of the Hunter" is one of the most bizarre and haunting pictures in the annals of Hollywood. In his most unforgettable performance, Mitchum plays a malevolent itinerant con man, fists tattooed with the words "LOVE" and "HATE," who serenely terrorizes children to get at their mama's money — in other words, a preacher.

The gonzo Southern Gothic fairy tale was both the alpha and the-omega of the directing career of actor Charles Laughton, who knew that if the stars align, one shot is plenty.

History in Harmony

Haale's psychedelic trance-rock conjures her Persian past

MUSIC | It's never easy to defy the expectations of middle-class parents for a life of rock 'n' roll. It's especially hard when your parents are Iranian medical professionals who immigrated to America assuming you'd follow their career path. So credit New York songstress Haale for realizing her rock dreams when she set aside her Stanford biology degree to instead make tribal trance rock that — ironically — evokes her family's heritage.

"I was always singing, since I was a little kid," she explains. "Unfortunately, it wasn't really totally supported in my family. I come from a family of doctors, and they wanted me to take that route. I did it for a while. Then, in college, someone gave me a guitar for my birthday, and I immediately started writing songs. Once I started, I said, 'This is it. I'm not gonna go to medical school.'"

What Haale did do is doctor up an original style. It's based on her wailing Persian music-derived vocals but also includes elements of psychedelia, poetry and tribal drumming. It caught the ear of The New York Times, which compared her to two of her influences, the Velvet Underground and the Doors. It also entranced David Byrne, who included Haale as part of a Carnegie Hall concert he organized.

"People call it psychedelic. I'm not so sure — it has its psychedelic moments," she muses. "There's a trance-rock element to it in terms of the droning that happens in some of the songs. And there are modal things happening harmonically."

After self-releasing two EPs in 2007, Haale just came out with a full-length CD, "No Ceiling." Her new effort, she says, is more "naturalistic," since it captures "the sounds of the instruments and the voice without necessarily using any kind of filters or effects."

The ecstatic response from both critics and her budding audience has been nice, but the real question is: Have Mom and Pop learned to dig her grooves?

"They love it now," she laughs. "They couldn't believe their daughter was at Carnegie Hall. They realize that sometimes people have to be artists out of necessity."

Playing Against Type

Landless stages a staging of the meta musical 'Gutenberg!'

STAGE | "This is probably the most important play the audience is probably ever going to see in their entire lives," John Sadowsky says of "Gutenberg! The Musical," which he is directing at Landless Theatre.

Such a statement is a comic exaggeration to everyone but the two characters in this play within a play. A clever piece of meta theater written by Scott Brown and Anthony King, "Gutenberg!" involves two would-be writers, Bud and Doug, presenting their vision of the life of Johann Gutenberg, inventor of the printing press, to an audience of potential backers.

Bud and Doug, played by brothers Andrew and Matt Baughman, must play every character in their very large cast, including the titular hero, a busty heroine named Helvetica, an evil monk named Monk, and the entire population of fictional Schlimmer, Germany.

They accomplish this feat with cardboard boxes, chairs and lots of baseball caps with the characters' names written on them.

According to Sadowsky, directing the brothers was relatively easy. "There's not a whole lot to do as a director," he admits. "I feel almost guilt taking credit for directing it."

"Gutenberg!" is not just a comedy; it's a comedy marathon. The brothers sing, dance, talk directly to the audience and perform feats of physical comedy. Accompanying them is Landless musical director Charles Johnson, whose deadpan demeanor contrasts nicely with Andrew and Matt's unflinchingly frenetic performances.

"It's fun, but it's tiring," says Matt Baughman. "We get a good workout." STEPHEN M. DEUSNER

Rap Through a Prism

Katastrophe sees the hip-hop landscape from two angles

MUSIC | They say it's a man's world. In a more enlightened one, that might not be so bad. Tatted-up hairy guys named Rocco with gold chains would rhyme about misogyny, androgyny and "what it looks like to be enough man."

If 28-year-old MC Rocco Kayiatos, who performs under the name Katastrophe, seems like a different kind of dude, it's because he is: Kayiatos was born female, transitioning eight years ago as an FTM (female-to-male) transman.

"Being trans ... was a really painful thing to reconcile," he explains. "But it allows me to be conscious of the beautiful aspects of masculinity. It lets me look at how I interact as a white man in the world, how I can be a man who is compassion-discussion in hip-hop. Katastrophe quickly found fans in the queer community, touring the U.S. and Europe with acts like Team Gina and Nicky Click. But even among lesbians — a group he once identified as part of — Kayiatos found that rapping about gender provoked strong opinions and even distrust.

"I felt like nobody knew where to go with all these newly straight men in their community. We know what to do with gay men, with gay women. But we barely know what to do with bisexuals. And what do we do with a really straight trans-guy? It's like the final frontier. I feel like transphobia and bi-phobia go hand in hand."

His upcoming album, "The Worst Amazing," is more slickly produced than previous efforts, with a sound that leans toward El-P, Aesop Rock and a little Flostradomus. And while he remains connected to the gay community, the tour venues are skewing a bit more mainstream — it's the Black Cat over Phase 1 this time around. SHAUNA MILLER

Guilt and Railstands

Skateboarding and contemplating death with Gus Van Sant

FILM | There's something peculiarly indie about the buzz and hum of a downtuned guitar; the squeak of fingers on strings; the hoarse, hushed crack in the voice. Warps on a glossy surface are welcoming spaces in which our musical imaginations can roam.

This state of drifting thoughtfulness is caught impeccably in "Paranoid Park," Gus Van Sant's dreamlike adaptation of a young-adult novel about a skater boy absorbing the fact of his involvement in a security guard's grisly death.

Van Sant has become the cinematic poet of the dewy and inarticulate, male category, but "Paranoid Park," which had its well-received debut at the Cannes Film Festival last year, has much more going on under the surface than in the static "Last Days" or the fetishy "Elephant."

In a Portland, Ore., that's ravishingly photographed by Christopher Doyle, Alex (Gabe Nevins) pingpongs through his days, unmoored at home, at school and on the street. Only the promise — and threat — of transcending the earth at the elite Paranoid Park skatepark shakes Alex out of his relentless interiority.

The story of the accident, what led up to it and what followed is told as Alex writes the tale down in order exorcise it. But his mumblings and even his memories say less than the fine soundtrack does about Alex's emotions as they mutate in the accident's aftermath. Tom Waits and Elliott Smith and even Nino Rota tell this story, in haunted whispers and widescreen emotions.

Van Sant's explorations of male brink-of-manhood have their queasy-making side. But the ripe young things at the center of "Paranoid Park" — Nevins and Jake Miller as his friend — aren't stand-ins for adult longing but people with souls, ideas and, eventually, tragically, consciences.

Remaking The Movies

Jean-Luc Godard's late work explored the language of film

DVD | Along with Francois Truffaut and Jacques Rivette, Jean-Luc Godard has become synonymous with the French New Wave movement of the 1950s and 1960s, which jettisoned cinematic narrative for a more impressionistic, self-aware, often theoretical flow of images. As confidently as he burst certain conventions, Godard also drew heavily from American popular cinema, especially gangster movies and film noir.

He was, as film critic David Thompson has remarked, "the first filmmaker to bristle with the effort of digesting all previous cinema and to make cinema itself his subject." The characters in "Breathless" and "Band of Outsiders" model not just their clothing and their language on movie stars, but also their bleak worldviews and nearly nihilistic rebellion.

Twenty years later, cinema was still Godard's primary subject, although he had a much more complex view of the form, as the new "Jean-Luc Godard 3-Disc Collector's Edition" suggests. The set includes four of the director's later

COURTESY STUDIO CANAL

THE SUBJECT WAS CINEMA: Godard's self-awareness invades every frame.

films — "Passion," "Prénom Carmen (First Name: Carmen)," "Détective" and "Hélas Pour Moi (Oh Woe Is Me)" — along with a sole bonus feature, a new short documentary titled "Jean-Luc Godard: A Riddle Wrapped in an Enigma."

Even as he addresses other issues, Godard cannot escape his self-awareness. "Passion," from 1982, is ostensibly about a Polish director making an art-historical epic in France. Despite his dalliances with two mistresses and a workers' uprising at a local factory, it has only the slimmest notion of a story — just as Godard intends.

In 1983's "Prénom Carmen," based loosely on the Mallarmé story, the director plays a director who has committed himself to a psychiatric hospital. "Détective," from 1985, breezily reshuffles film noir motifs. Even Hélas Pour Moi, about a god (or the God) inhabiting a human body, seems to have accrued cinematic weight, if only in the way Godard's camera shifts focus to create a dramatic intimacy.

Bound thematically as well as chronologically, these four films attempt to divine the intersection between sex, God, class, art and French national identity, which to Godard are essentially the same thing — namely, film.

THE WASHINGTON POST'S FILM CRITICS TACKLE THIS WEEK'S BOX-OFFICE TOP 10

1 | Dr. Seuss' Horton Hears a Who!

This film reaches us as powerfully as the plaintive little voice that, one Dr. Seusslike day, catches the ear of Horton the Elephant. DESSON THOMSON

2 | 10,000 B.C.

This is the kind of B-movie cheese that used to make Saturday matinees such fun, but action director Roland Emmerich manages to zap almost all the fun out of it. ANN HORNADAY

3 | Never Back Down

"Never Back Down" is a boneheaded cliché-rama built around six-pack-ab standoffs between preening studs. DESSON THOMSON

4 | College Road Trip

Perhaps there will be people who laugh at Martin Lawrence and Raven-Symoné screaming and mugging. JOHN ANDERSON

5 | Vantage Point

How was this thriller with the

20TH CENTURY FOX

THE DOCTOR IS IN: The mayor of Whoville welcomes you to his Seussian realm.

"Groundhog Day" fixation allowed out of Columbia Pictures with so much bad acting? JOHN ANDERSON

6 | The Bank Job

Roger Donaldson's account of this real-life robbery illuminates an almost moral clash between the haves and the have-nots of Great Britain. DESSON THOMSON

7 | Doomsday

A virus is on the loose in London in this thriller; it was not screened for review.

8 | Semi-Pro

We don't want to jump to conclusions, but someone looking exactly like Will Ferrell appears to be starring in "Semi-Pro," a head-shaker of a comedy.

DESSON THOMSON

9 | The Other Boleyn Girl

The movie, starring Scarlett Johansson and Natalie Portman, is about half a notch above a shameless bodice ripper. DESSON THOMSON

10 | The Spiderwick Chronicles

Fans of the young adult novel on which this film is based will be pleased by the depiction of the story's otherworldly creatures. ANN HORNADAY

Patriots on Parade

Even if you've never seen a World War II-era military training film, you'll recognize the government-sanctioned pomposity and doublespeak being sent up in writer/director Dale Kutzera's "Military Intelligence and You!" He combines new and vintage footage (with vintage stars) including Ronald Reagan to piece together this delicious bit of faux propaganda.

Cleanup Time

The Environmental Film Festival comes to the National Gallery on Saturday with two enlightening screenings. First up, at 2:30 p.m., is "Radiant City," a scathing portrayal of the effects of suburban sprawl. At 4:30 p.m., the Gallery presents "Garbage Warrior," a documentary about American architect Michael Reynolds and his determination to design and build sustainable works from existing — scrap — materials.

'Time of the Wolf'

An essential retrospective — of the works of Austrian pessimist Michael Haneke — continues at, among other places, Maison Française this weekend with a Thursday screening of "Time of the Wolf." This low-key post-apocalyptic drama follows a woman (Isabelle Huppert) and her children across a blasted French landscape and into a makeshift refugee camp, where she and other survivors await a ferry to civilization even as they tear down civility at every turn. Eating Around

SWEET STUFF

Sugar, Sugar at Co Co. Sala

Mind the artwork. It, like nearly everything at Co Co. Sala, is made of sugar. Glassy, whisper-thin sculptures and sprays of carved chocolate adorn the premises.

A custom-made “chocolateroom” is more of a shrine to the possibilities that have sprung forth from the cacao bean: There’s a place where cocoa gets rolled, cut and molded; display cases suggest Swarovski but promise a sweeter affair.

The chocolate-dappled menu includes eclectic crab cakes and tarted-up mac and cheese (try it with bacon or shrimp). Morning pastries add bounce to the business rush. And on weekends, the music spins till the wee hours for social sips of liqueurs.

CORDUROY REOPENS

His Own Man; His Own Food

To hear that one has become a disciple — even of a great chef — can be frustrating praise. Tom Power emerged from his apprenticeship at Citronelle with the “disciple of Michel Richard” label. But Power has stepped out from Richard’s redoubtable shadow much the way his restaurant, Corduroy, has emerged from the shadow of its former Four Points home.

The new digs (in Shaw, no less) put the refined flavors and daisy-fresh ingredients that have distinguished Power among his peers front and center. Now that it isn’t housed in a hotel, a visit to Corduroy means go for the food and stay for the food. (cc)

CHIPS ON U

Bobby Lew Gets an Accent

Bobby Lew’s Saloon on 18th and U streets has dual personalities. One comes out at night — weekends, actually — in the form of a college-town bar for getting chummy with old friends and meeting (or shimmying up to) new ones. The other persona is that of a true watering hole, with tchotchkes on the walls and good, stiff drinks. Across the street, owner Martin Corboy opened the Blaguard, a proper chipper. The establishment already feels worn-in, and hefty hunks of battered fish boast the charm and airiness of those found in coastal New England. (cc)

Printemps in the Air

The National Gallery of Art puts artistic inspiration on a plate

LUNCH IN THE GARDEN | Before kaleidoscopic drips ever suggested subject, object or setting, there was plein-air painting. Impressionism was on the horizon, and artists trained in Neoclassicism were still painting things that looked like, well, what they look like.

In the exhibition "In the Forest of Fontainebleau" at the National Gallery, we are invited to see what Corot, Monet and others saw, where they may have picnicked and even what they ate. And through June 8, the gallery's Garden Café is offering an eating tour of the woods, the cottages and the romantic realism that finds its echo in the art. Four local chefs have created a menu steeped in this lush aesthetic.

Patrick Orange of La Chaumière contributed a slow-cooked boeuf bourguignonne comprises Angus eye of round, fingerling potatoes and a garnish of bittersweet chocolate to finish the jus.

Scott Chambers, of Chevy Chase's La Ferme, provided a crab rémoulade featuring buttery chunks of crabmeat, red onion and avocado, and spiked with a zippy brandy-infused sauce.

Alexandria's Le Refuge is represented by chef Jean-Claude Le Lan's chocolate mousse with crème anglaise. Soft peaks of milk chocolate get a welcome kick from powder. Its ideal pairing is a handful of garden berries on the side.

And the National Gallery's executive chef, David Rogers, has devised a sprawling buffet that could easily fit in one of the paintings. The quiche Lorraine is a rustic standard. But the smoked trout salad — embellished with pickled red onions and watercress that looks like it has been ripped from one of Rousseau's landscapes — is positively homey, as are the chilled fingerling potatoes with black truffle.

Poached Anjou pears wading in a flirty port reduction maintain their succulence and lose the mealy texture that occasionally spoils the flavor. If chocolate mousse sounds too sinful to approach, the pears and hazelnut tuile are subtler.

But diners flocked to the chicken fricassee with wild mushrooms, carrots and leeks. It suggests the earthiness and delicacy of Corot's "Le Ragueur, Forest of Fontainebleau" and Renoir's "The Inn of Mother Anthony," both lovingly produced depictions of the quiet life on the French countryside, disrupted only by the rattle of leaves and the swish of a paintbrush.

ROCK ON A LARGE SCALE | SUPER FRESH

DON'T SQUEEZE THE TOMATOES: For an "experimental" outfit, Le Loup is surprisingly accessible. The D.C. natives make ultramodern rock without art-rock pretensions, and dabble deftly in electronics, melodics and grungy sonics. They'll show you what that's all about at the Black Cat on Friday with the Ruby Suns and Bellman Barker.
